Rebecca Quinn's clients range from world-renowned academic and research institutions to advising start-up enterprises. Rebecca's area of expertise includes IP protection, NDAs, advising on research funding agreements and general commercial advice including terms and conditions for sale and supply; advising on and drafting research collaboration agreements (both with and without external funding), strategic advice on and preparing agreements for large-scale partnership projects; preparing End User Licence Agreements for newly developed App programmes and advising on developer agreements and advising on the preparation for IP policies. In addition, Rebecca advises on the licensing, transfer and ownership of IP and know-how. She has even drafted an agreement for the loan of a robot, developed to help neuro-divergent children, which involved sending it half way round the world.

Previously Rebecca has assisted leading academic and research institutions and other entities on drafting their membership terms and agreements for incubator hubs, as well as updating intellectual property policies for staff and students alike. Rebecca also has experience of advising on collaboration and research agreements between universities and private sector companies.

How we can help:

- Technology and data protection is such a fast moving field. I deal with new challenges and different issues every day. This means I can give strategic advice which works for each business to make sure their data sharing aims comply with their obligations and policies. This includes drafting Confidentiality agreements and privacy policies and even intra- group arrangements for data sharing
- If I am made part of your team in terms of understanding your aims and company culture, I can deliver relevant and pragmatic advice and guidance
- I always seek to give quick, commercially-focused advice to help clients take their businesses into new territory.
